The many demands of a modern yacht buyer often make it difficult for builders to create something appealing to everyone, but the house of Azimut has a long tradition of doing just that. Their latest model, Atlantis 45, is a chimera composed from two almost opposites: a family cruiser and an aggressive, dynamic sport cruiser.

The new Atlantis has a vertical bow, an element that immediately announces a sporty model. Signature Azimut portholes make the hull look longer, which was a smart move considering the substantial width of the 45 (4,25 m), but also allow natural light to seep inside.
